

literacy

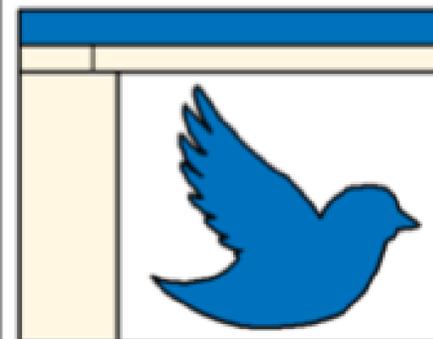

character profile

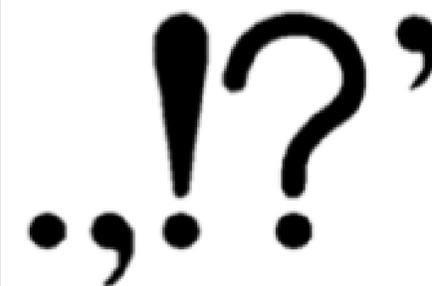

write an article

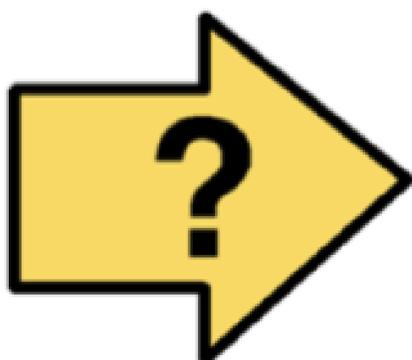

create a web page

re-tweet your story

punctuation checker

what happens next

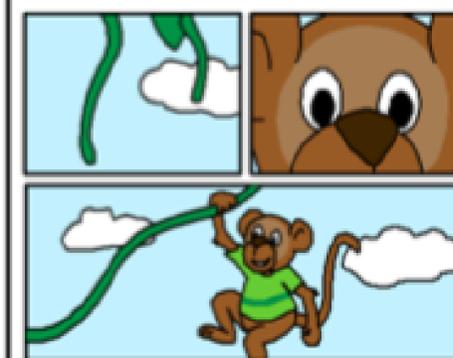

spell

make a poster

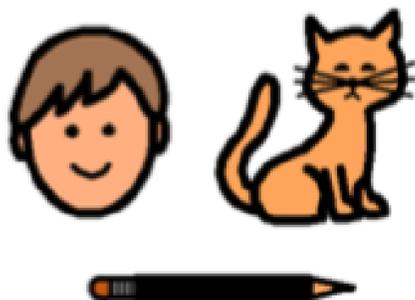

write a story

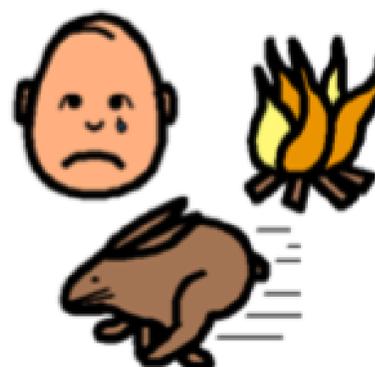

make a comic strip

write a letter

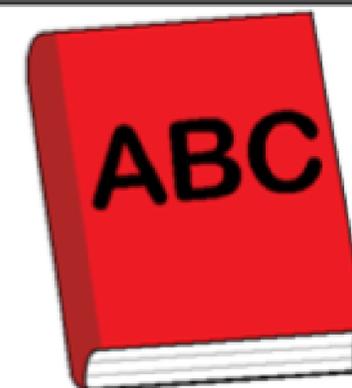

noun namer

adjective editor

story editor

dictionary define

character profile

Create a profile of a character from your book.
Draw a picture of them and tell us about them.
Why are they important to the story?
What is your favourite thing about them?
If you were the author, what would you change?

write an article

Write a newspaper article about what has happened in your book so far.
Give your article an eye catching title.
You may choose to 'interview' characters from the book.

create a web page

Draw a web page outline on paper.
Create a webpage about something that interests you. It could be about the book that you are reading or your hobby.
Remember to include the features of a webpage such as weblink and contact information.

punctuation checker

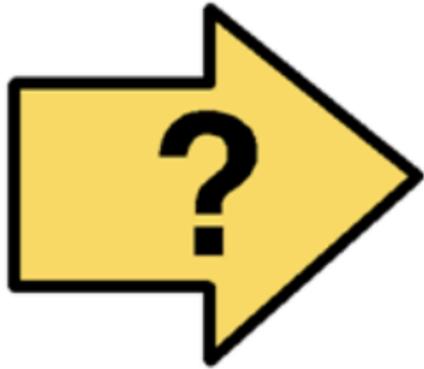

Go to the last book or chapter that you have read.

How many pieces of punctuation are there?

How many can you name?

How many are new?

Which ones are new? How do you think they help a reader or writer?

what happens next

Tell someone what has happened so far in your book.

Pretend you are the author. Write or tell someone what you would make happen next?

Has the real author left any clues for you to work out what will happen next?

ca

spell

Are there any tricky spelling words you can find in your book or around your house?

What would help you to spell the word?

Can you rearrange the letters and make a new word? Give the new word to someone and ask them to guess what the original word was.

make a poster

Create a poster.

You might choose to make it about your book or about something that interests you.

Think about who you want to see your poster.

Make a front cover and create a story.

What type of story will you write? One about a daring knight off on a perilous journey to save the world? One about a dog who discovers his special gift of talking to cats? One about a bike and how it took over the world? One about you and what you are doing? Will it be a true story or will it be made up? You don't have to finish it. You can add to it

Create a comic strip.

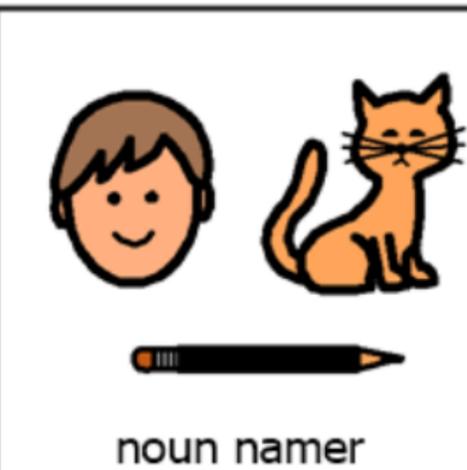

Perhaps you will base it on your book or a funny memory or something else.

Remember to use speech bubbles to let the reader know who is talking.

Write a letter to your teacher or an elderly neighbour or an imaginary friend in a far off land.

Let them know how you are and what you are doing. Ask questions about them and what they are doing.

Open your book at any page or chapter.

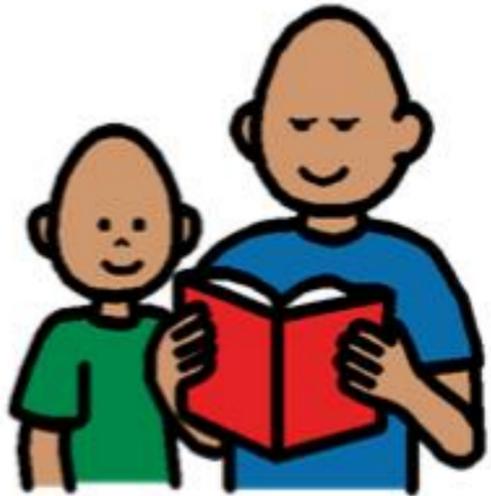

Can you write a list of all the nouns on that page or chapter?

Could you change the nouns? Would that change the story a little or too much?

Literacy

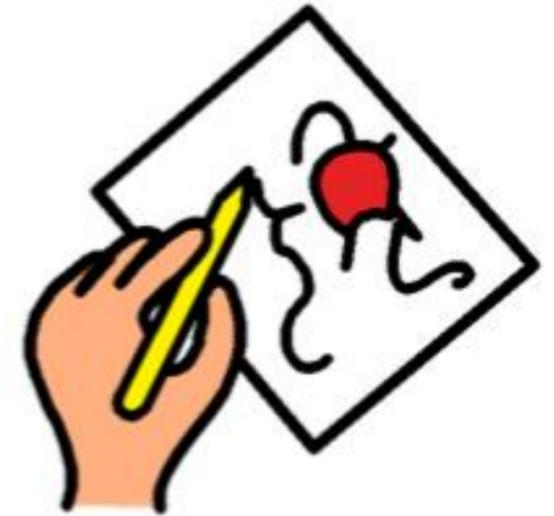

read with adult

sing nursery rhymes

pretend

draw characters

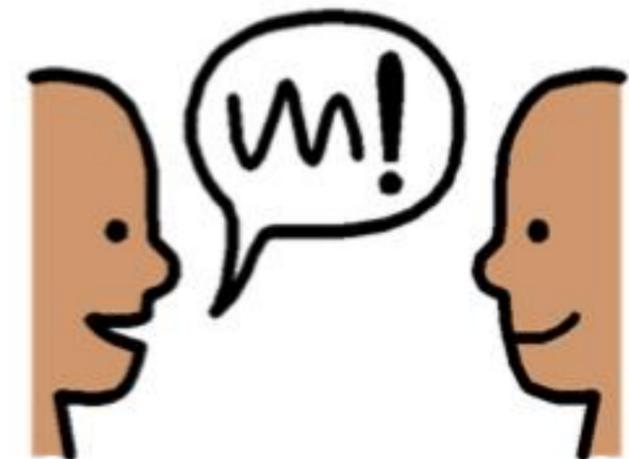

puppet show

dress up

write a letter

talk

